LITTLE WOMEN, ILLUSTRATED

they talked about the different countries as they stitched their way through them.

At nine they stopped work, and sung, as usual, before they went to bed. No one but Beth could get much music out of the old piano; but she had a way of softly touching the yellow keys, and making a pleasant accompaniment to the simple songs they sung. Meg had a voice like a flute, and she and her mother led the little choir. Amy chirped like a cricket, and Jo wandered through the airs at her own sweet will, always coming out at the wrong place with a croak or a quaver that spoilt the most pensive tune. They had always done this from the time they could lisp

"Crinkle, crinkle, 'ittle 'tar,"

One handsome quarto volume, with nearly two hundred characteristic illustrations drawn and engraved specially for this edition, bound in cloth, with emblematic cover designs. Price $5.00.

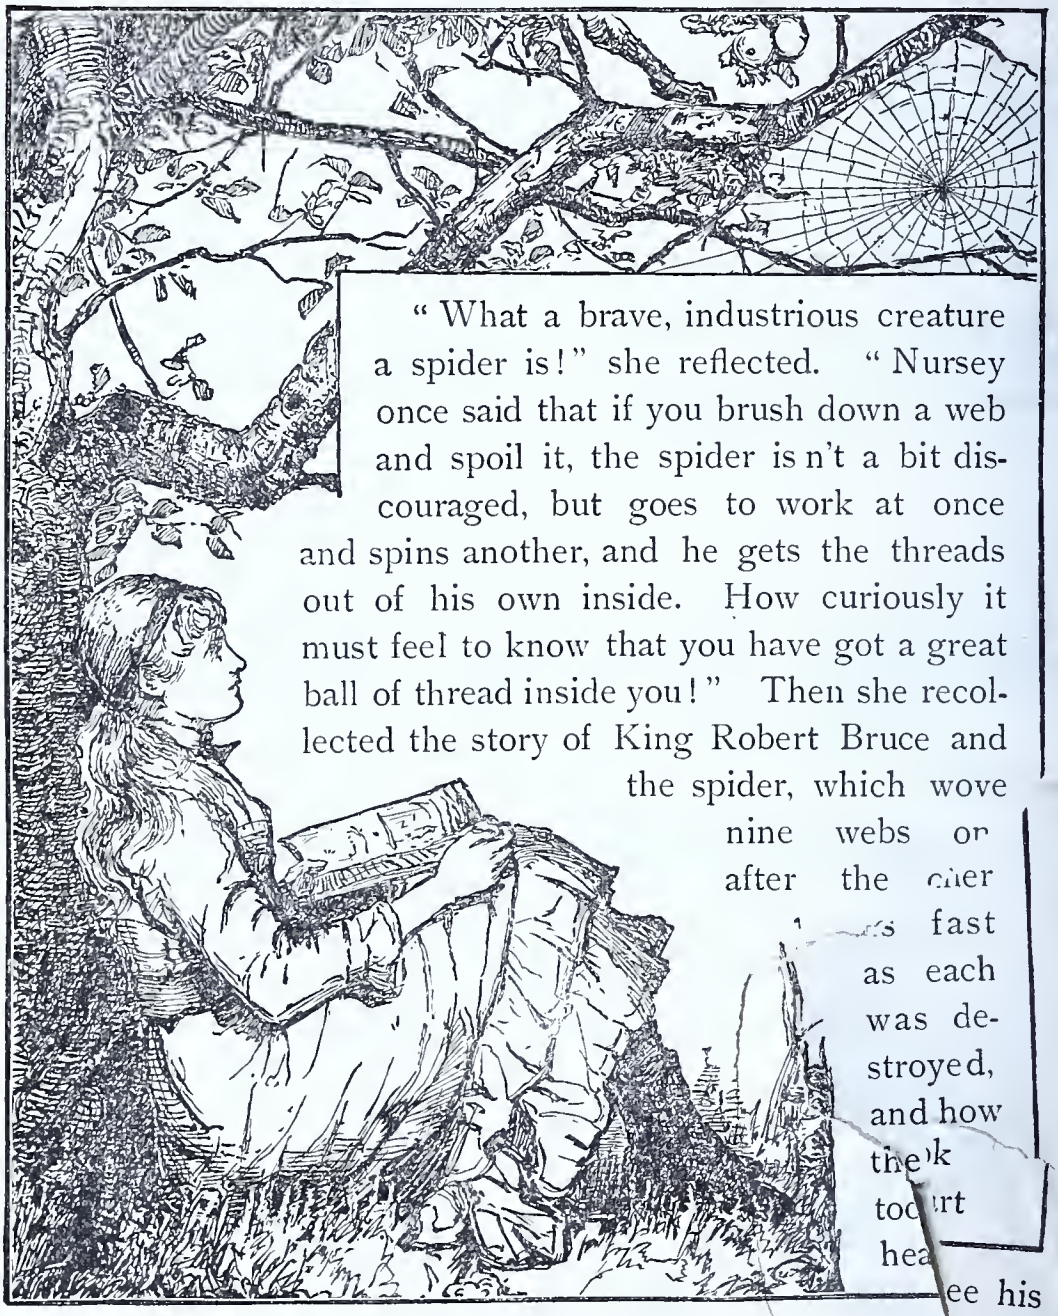
A GUERNSEY LILY.



"What a brave, industrious creature a spider is!" she reflected. "Nursey once said that if you brush down a web and spoil it, the spider is n't a bit discouraged, but goes to work at once and spins another, and he gets the threads out of his own inside. How curiously it must feel to know that you have got a great ball of thread inside you!" Then she recollected the story of King Robert Bruce and the spider, which wove nine webs or after the ner fast as each was destroyed, and how the k to rt hea ee his from watching this, and resolved on one more effort to fr just people, though things were looking very dark and difficul
